With today’s program, Blue Heron continues its exploration of music from one of the largest and most important extant sources of sacred English polyphony from before the Reformation, the Peterhouse partbooks (so called because they are now housed at Peterhouse, the oldest and smallest of the Cambridge colleges). The partbooks were copied around 1540 by Thomas Bull of Magdalen College, Oxford, for Canterbury Cathedral, which had recently been dissolved by Henry VIII as a monastic foundation and refounded shortly afterwards as a secular cathedral that boasted a topnotch new choral establishment consisting of ten choristers, their master, and twelve professional singing men. Among the twelve adult singers were Thomas Tallis and Bull himself, who left his post at Magdalen College in order to join the new choir at Canterbury, bringing with him a large repertoire of music for its use. The Peterhouse partbooks contain 72 works, including large-scale settings of the Ordinary of the Mass, Magnificats, and antiphons addressed mostly to Mary, some to Jesus or to another saint.

Very few sources of English church music remain from this period. A mere three choirbooks (including the famous Eton Choirbook, more than one-fifth of which has been lost), four sets of partbooks (including Peterhouse), and one organ book transmit almost all of the music which survives from between the late fifteenth century and the Reformation in 1547. (Compare this to, for example, the sixteen choirbooks owned by Magdalen College alone in 1524.) The rest were deliberately destroyed after the Reformation or were simply lost to neglect or decay. Indeed, the tenor book and part of the treble book of the Peterhouse set disappeared centuries ago, and it is only through the astonishing creative efforts of the English musicologist Nick Sandon, who has restored the missing parts, that we are able to sing this music today.

Detailed accounts of the history of the Peterhouse partbooks and their restoration, as well as lengthy essays on many aspects of performance practice of English polyphonic music, from pitch to scoring to pronunciation, may be found on Blue Heron’s website, where one may also download PDFs of most of our past programs. Rather than reprint all that material here, I refer the interested reader to www.blueheron.org.

Richard Pygott

Richard Pygott was a member in turn of two of the very best choirs in England, the household chapels of Cardinal Thomas Wolsey and Henry VIII. He may have been a singer at Magdalen College, Oxford (the source of most of the Peterhouse repertoire) and there caught the eye of Cardinal Wolsey, who was a former member of Magdalen College and the founder of Cardinal College, Oxford. By 1517...
Pygott was Master of the Children in Wolsey’s household chapel, responsible for the training and supervising of ten choristers. He was so effective in this job that the King became jealous of the qualities of Wolsey’s boys, and in the spring of 1518 the Dean of Henry’s chapel “requested” that one of them be transferred to the royal household, assuring Wolsey (not, perhaps, without a certain undertone of menace), that “if it were not for the personal love that the King’s highness doth bear unto your grace, surely he would have out of your chapel not children only, but also men; for his grace hath plainly shewed unto Cornysche [i.e. William Cornysh, master of the children in Henry’s chapel] that your Grace’s Chapel is better than his.” The boy was duly transferred, and Pace wrote again to say that “Cornysh doth greatly laud and praise the child of your chapel sent hither, not only for his sure singing but also for his good and cleanly singing but also for his good and cleanly singing and contratenor in the Gloria at “Qui tollis nostram” and in the third petition of the Agnus dei. This is music composed on a wonderfully spacious scale, resulting in rich sonorities, sometimes surprising harmonies, and long-drawn out melismas. As so often happens in the long Masses from the Peterhouse partbooks, things culminate in one musical manuscript and played the keyboards. Besides Ave vulnus lateris, the only piece of his that survives is a pavan in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book and two other, later sources.

Ave vulnus lateris

Ave vulnus lateris is one of the last additions to the Peterhouse partbooks, perhaps suggesting that Bull acquired the music in London en route to Canterbury from Oxford, tenor, mostly in unornamented long notes. It is heard seven times in the Gloria, seven in the Credo, three in the Sanctus, and four in the Agnus, perhaps alluding to the sevenfold gifts of the Holy Spirit (mentioned in the Kyrie fons bonitatis and to the three persons of the Trinity. Dr. Sandon remarks that “Pygott’s rather idiosyncratic style... may give an impression of relaxation and waywardness; but his lines have their own sense of integrity, often characterized by concealed motivic argument.” He is fond of ornate melodic writing and busy, dotted rhythms, which feature in his Salve regina as well as in the Mass; here they are especially on display in lengthy duets between treble and contratenor in the Gloria at “Qui tollis peccata mundi, suscipe deprecationem nostram” and in the third petition of the Agnus dei. This is music composed on a wonderfully spacious scale, resulting in rich sonorities, sometimes surprising harmonies, and long-drawn out melismas. As so often happens in the long Masses from the Peterhouse partbooks, things culminate in one musical manuscript and played the keyboards. Besides Ave vulnus lateris, the only piece of his that survives is a pavan in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book and two other, later sources.

Walter Erle

Walter Erle the composer (spelled Erley and Erell in the Peterhouse manuscripts and several other ways in contemporary documents) appears to be the same man as a courtier from a family of minor gentry in Devon who became a chamber servant in the households of two of Henry VIII’s wives, Catherine Howard and Catherine Parr, and in those of his children Edward, Mary, and Elizabeth during their respective reigns. Erle first turns up in 1541 as a “page” or attendant in an entry-level position; likely he was in his early 20s at the time, mature enough as a musician to have already composed the antiphon Ave vulnus lateris, which was copied into the Peterhouse partbooks right around then, but still in the early stages of his career at court. He proved adept at navigating the turbulent waters at court in those years, not only surviving religious and political upheaval and serving monarchs both Catholic and Protestant, but rising to a position of some privilege, acquiring a modest fortune, and dying a prosperous man in 1581. Dr. Sandon observes that his musical skill, which he exercised non-professionally as a gentleman, may have assured his success at court, but his record as a musician is scant. All we know is that he owned at least one musical manuscript and played the keyboards. Besides Ave vulnus lateris, the only piece of his that survives is a pavan in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book and two other, later sources.

Ave vulnus lateris

Ave vulnus lateris is one of the last additions to the Peterhouse partbooks, perhaps suggesting that Bull acquired the music in London en route to Canterbury from Oxford,
though a slight bit of evidence also connects Erle to Oxford itself, where he may have spent some time without earning a degree. The text is an indulgenced prayer customarily found in English books of hours, where it was noted that “Pope Innocent II granted forty years of indulgence to anybody devoutly reciting the following prayer.” Each of the two eight-line stanzas adheres to the standard formula for such prayers: salutation and praise, followed by petition. Erle distributes the text in an asymmetrical fashion that emphasizes its rhetorical structure, with each petition divided into two phrases, the second of which reiterates or intensifies the sentiments of the first:

Trio of high voices (treble, mean, contratenor), setting the first salutation and the first part of the petition: “Hail, the wound in the side of our savior, from which flowed a spring of water and blood. / Be thou now a remedy / of the sorrows of those who suffer.” 30 bars, ending in a long melisma on the penultimate syllable of the last word, doloris.

Duet of low voices (tenor and bass), setting the continuation of the first petition: “Do not let a second death / harm thy people here below, / but in the sight of the godhead / make the mind joyful.” 25 bars, the melodies becoming more and more florid, and ending in a melisma on the the penultimate syllable of the last word, jocunda.

Full: “Amen.” 19 bars—more than a sixth of the length of the entire piece.

Among the Peterhouse composers Erle stands apart as a gentleman amateur among professionals, but this, his sole extant vocal work, is an accomplished, attractive, and winning piece of music, “fluent and remarkably enterprising,” as Dr. Sandon remarks, “if rather erratic in pace and style and sometimes a little rough in technique.”

Blue Heron has been acclaimed by The Boston Globe as “one of the Boston music community’s indispensables” and hailed by Alex Ross in The New Yorker for its “expressive intensity.” Committed to vivid live performance informed by the study of original source materials and historical performance practices, Blue Heron ranges over a wide repertoire from plainchant to new music, with particular specialties in 15th-century Franco-Flemish and early 16th-century English polyphony. Blue Heron’s first CD, featuring music by Guillaume Dufay, was released in 2007. In 2010 the ensemble inaugurated a 5-CD series of Music from the Peterhouse Partbooks, including many world premiere recordings of works copied c. 1540 for Canterbury Cathedral; the fifth disc was released in March 2017 and was just selected as a Critics’ Choice of 2017 by Gramophone. Blue Heron’s recordings also include a CD of plainchant and polyphony to accompany Thomas Forrest Kelly’s book Capturing Music: The Story of Notation and the live recording Christmas in Medieval England. Jessie Ann Owens (UC Davis) and Blue Heron won the 2015 Noah Greenberg Award from the American Musicological Society and Blue Heron won the 2015 Noah Greenberg Award from the American Musicological Society and Blue Heron won the 2015 Noah Greenberg Award from the American Musicological Society and Blue Heron won the 2015 Noah Greenberg Award from the American Musicological Society and Blue Heron won the 2015 Noah Greenberg Award from the American Musicological Society.
