Voices
Michael Barrett
Ian Howell
Owen McIntosh
Jason McStoots
Martin Near
Aaron Sheehan
Sumner Thompson

Instruments
Laura Jeppesen, fiddle
Charles Weaver, lute
Scott Metcalfe, fiddle, harp

Joel Gordon, engineering & mastering
Scott Metcalfe & Eric Milnes, producers
Eric Milnes & Joel Gordon, editing
Recorded at the Church of the Redeemer, Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts, in 2010 & 2014.

Tracks 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 & 8 were commissioned for the CD accompanying Capturing Music: The Story of Notation by Thomas Forrest Kelly (W. W. Norton: New York & London, 2015). Used by permission from W. W. Norton.

950 Watertown Street, Suite 8, West Newton MA 02465 | (617) 960-7956 | info@blueheron.org | www.blueheron.org

BLUE HERON

Scott Metcalfe, artistic director

Voices
Michael Barrett
Ian Howell
Owen McIntosh
Jason McStoots
Martin Near
Aaron Sheehan
Sumner Thompson

Instruments
Laura Jeppesen, fiddle
Charles Weaver, lute
Scott Metcalfe, fiddle, harp

Joel Gordon, engineering & mastering
Scott Metcalfe & Eric Milnes, producers
Eric Milnes & Joel Gordon, editing
Recorded at the Church of the Redeemer, Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts, in 2010 & 2014.

Tracks 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 & 8 were commissioned for the CD accompanying Capturing Music: The Story of Notation by Thomas Forrest Kelly (W. W. Norton: New York & London, 2015). Used by permission from W. W. Norton.

950 Watertown Street, Suite 8, West Newton MA 02465 | (617) 960-7956 | info@blueheron.org | www.blueheron.org

BLUE HERON

A 14TH-CENTURY SALMAGUNDI

1 Petrus de Cruce (fl. c. 1290)
   Aucun ont trouvé / Lonc tans me sui tenu / Annuntiantes
   JM MB ST 3:37

2 Attr. to Philippe de Vitry (1291–1361)
   Garrit gallus / In nova fert animus
   MN IH SM 2:40

3 Guillaume de Machaut (c. 1300–1377)
   En mon cuer a un descort
   AS SM 4:47

4 Machaut
   Biauté qui toutes autres pere
   OM LJ SM 6:07
   (version with added contratenor, probably not by Machaut)

5 Jacob Senleches (fl. 1380s)
   En attentant, Esperance conforte
   OM CW SM 11:52

6 Anonymous
   Io son un pellegrin
   OM ST 3:05

7 Jacopo da Bologna (fl. 1340–?1386)
   Osellecto selvaggio
   AS ST 4:28

8 Francesco Landini (c. 1325–1397)
   Musica son / Già furon / Ciascun vuole
   OM JM ST 3:27

TOTAL TIME 40:04

Sources
1 Montpellier, Bibliothèque interuniversitaire, Section Médecine, MS. H. 196, ff. 273-273v
2 Roman de Fauvel, Paris, Bibliothèque nationale, MS fr. 146, f. 44v
3 Machaut MS Vg (Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, Parker Library, MS Ferrell I), ff. 330v-331; also in MSS B, A, G & E
4 3-part version in Machaut MS E (Paris, Bibliothèque nationale, MS fr. 9221), ff. 152v-153; 2-part in MSS C, Vg, B, A & G
5 Modena, Biblioteca Estense e.M.5.24, ff. 40v-41
6 Paris, Bibliothèque nationale, MS ital. 568, f. 42v
7 Florence, Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale, MS Panciatichi 26 / Paris, Bibliothèque nationale, nouv. acq. fr. 6771 (Reina Codex) / Florence, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana, MS Mediceo Palatino 87 (Squarcialupi Codex) / etc.
8 Squarcialupi Codex, ff. 12r-122

Information about these manuscripts and links to digital images of many may be found in the Digital Image Archive of Medieval Music, www.diamm.ac.uk.
Aucun ont trouvé / Lonc tans me sui tenu / Annun[tiantes]

TRIPLUM
Aucun ont trouvé chant par usage,
Mes a moi en doune ochoison
Amours, qui resbaudist mon courage,
Si que m’estuet faire chançon,
Car amer me fait dame bele et sage Et de bon renon,
Et je, qui li ai fait houmage
Pour li servir tout mon aage
De loial cuer sans penser trahison,
Chanterai, car de li tieng un si douz heritage, Que joie n’ai se de ce non:
C’est la pensée, que mon douz mal masouage,
Et fait esperer garison,
Ne pour quant suer mi puoi clamer hausage
Amours et moi tout mon vivant tenir en sa prison.
Ne ja pour ce ne penserais vers li mesprison;
Tant set soutilment assallir, K’encontre li defendre ne s’en peut on.
Force de cors ne plenté de lignage
Ne vaut un bouton,
Et si li plaist de raençon
Rendre a son gré, sui pris et l’en fais gage
Mon cuer, que je met du tout en abandon.
Si proi merci, car autre avantaje
N’ai je ne pour moi nule autre raison.

Some have invented songs out of habit, but I am given incentive by Love, who so fills my heart with joy that I must make a song, for he makes me love a lady fair and wise
and of good name.
And I, who have sworn to serve her all my life
with a loyal heart, without thought of betrayal, will sing, for from her I receive so sweet a gift that I have no joy save for one:
this is the thought that soothes my sweet pain
and gives hope for a cure.
Nevertheless, Love may claim supremacy over me and hold me in his prison all my life long, nor indeed shall I ever think ill of him for this.
He knows how to attack so subtly that no one can defend himself against him:
neither bodily strength nor noble lineage is worth a button,
and if it pleases him to grant ransom on his terms, I am taken and pledge my heart, which I wholly abandon.
Thus I pray for mercy, for I have no other resource,
nor any other reason in my favor.

MOTETUS
Lonc tans me sui tenu de chanter,
Mes or ai raison de joie mener,
Car boune amour me fait désirer
La miex ensegne
K’on puist en tout le mont trouver;
A li ne doit on nule autre comparer,
Et quant j’aim dame si praiser
Que grant deduit ai du penser,
Je puis bien prouver
Que mot a savoureuse vie,
Quoi que nus die,
En bien amer.

TENOR
Annun[tiantes]

For a long time I refrained from singing, but now I have reason to be joyous, for true love makes me desire the best bred lady whom one can find in the whole world:
none other can be compared with her.
And since I love so highly-prized a lady that I get great pleasure from the thought.
I can indeed prove that he who loves well leads a most delicious life, whatever anyone may say.
Garrit gallus / In nova fert animus

TRIPLUM
Garrit gallus flendo dolorose, luget quippe gallorum concio,
que satrape traditur dolose, excubitus sedens officio.
Atque vulpes, tamquam vispilio
in Belial vigens astucia, de leonis consensu proprio monarchisat, atat angaria.
Rursus, ecce, Jacob familia Pharaone altero fugatur;
non ut olim lude vestigia subintrace potens, lacrimatur.
In deserto fame flagellatur, adutoris carens armatura,
quamquam clamat, tamen spoliatur,
continuo fordan moritura,
miserorum exulum vox dura!
O Gallorum garritus doloris, cum leonis cecitas obscura fraudi paret vulpis proditoris eius fastus sustinens erroris insurgito: alias labitur et labetur quod habes honoris, quod mox in facinus tardis ultoribus itur.

MOTETUS
In nova fert animus
mutatas dicere formas:
my mind is bent to tell of forms
changed into new things:
that evil dragon, whom glorious Michael once utterly defeated by the miraculous power of the cross,
own armed thanks to Absalom,
own gloating with the eloquence of Ulysses,
own armed with the teeth of a wolf,
a soldier in the army of Thersites—
he lives again, changed into a fox.
Deprived of sight by the fox's tail,
the lion, ruled by the fox, obeys.
He sucks the blood of lambs, sated with chickens.
Alas! he never stops sucking and thirsts for a marriage, he does not lack for meat.
Now woe to the chickens, woe to the blind lion!
and finally, before Christ, woe to the dragon.

The rooster cries, lamenting sadly,
indeed the whole assembly of roosters laments, for they have been betrayed by the crafty satrap who was supposed to guard them.
And the fox, like a thief in the night,
vigorous with the cunning of Belial, reigns with the full consent of the lion himself.
Behold how the family of Jacob once again flees another Pharaoh:
no longer able to follow the path of the Jews
as before, it weeps.
In the desert it is tortured by hunger,
with no armor to help.
though they cry out yet they are robbed;
soon perhaps to die,
harsh is the voice of the wretched exiles,
O painful cries of the roosters!
Since the dark blindness of the lion is subject to the deceit of the treacherous fox, supporting his arrogance by encouraging sin, rise up! otherwise what is left of your honor slips away and will continue to slip away.
With only slow avengers it will soon turn to villainy.
En mon cuer a un descort

En mon cuer a un descort
Qui si fort le point et mort
Que, sans mentir,
S'Amours par son douz plaisir
N'i met accort
Aveuc ma dame, pour mort
Me doy tenir.

C'est de mon loyal Desire
Qui me vuet faire gehir
Le mal que port
Et comment j'aime et desir
Ma dame sans repentin
Et sans confort.

Mais Paour s'oppose fort Et dit que Desirs a tort De ce querir.
Qu'elle crient Refus oir
Qui pas ne dort
Et Dangiers qui fait a mort L'amant venir.

En mon cuer a un descort ...

Si ne say que devenir
Quant de ma dame remir
Le gentil port,
Car Paour me fait fremir
Et tramblant et tressaillir
Par son enort,

There is a discord in my heart,
which so strongly pierces and wounds it that I say without lying,
if Love by his sweet pleasure does not make an accord with my lady, I must consider myself dead.

It comes from my loyal Desire, which wants to make me confess the wrongs I commit, and how much I love and desire my lady, without regret and without comfort.

But Fear resists strongly and says that Desire is wrong to seek this,
for she fears hearing Refusal,
who never sleeps.
and Rejection, which makes a lover
come to his death.

There is a discord in my heart ...

Thus I do not know what will become of me when I admire my lady’s kind bearing.
for Fear makes me quiver and tremble and shake
by his suggestion,

Et Desirs, san nul deport.
Fait mon cuer par son effort
Taindre et palir;
Biaute me vient assaillir;
Douceur m’endort.
Mais Amours me fait au fort Taire et souffrir.

En mon cuer a un descort ...

Las! einsi m'estuet languir.
Pleindre, plourer et gemir
En desconfort.
Ne bien n’ay fors Souvenir,
Dous Penser et li servir:
La me confort,
La seulement me deport,
La sont geté tuit mi sort Et la me tir;
La veuil je vivre et morir
Et la m’acort;
La seront tuit mi ressort Jusqu’au morir.

En mon cuer a un descort ...

And Desire, without any respite, makes my heart, by his effort,
fade and turn pale;
Beauty comes to assail me;
Sweetness puts me to sleep.
But Love firmly
silences me and makes me suffer.

There is a discord in my heart ...

Alas! thus must I languish, lament, weep, and groan
in discomfort,
nor have I anything good but Memory,
Sweet Thoughts, and my service to her:
there I find comfort,
there only do I rejoice,
there I have cast all my fate,
and thence I lead myself;
there I wish to live and die,
and to this I agree;
there shall be all my refuge
until I die.

There is a discord in my heart ...
De tous ces mets est servis a fayson
Cilz qui ne sceit vivre sans Esperance.
Esperance tient ouverte la porte
Adont chascuns puet avoir guarison.
Esperance est de si noble sorte
Que cilz ne doit prendre confusion
Qui l’a o soy, et sanz li ne puet on Avoir loing temps de playsir habundance:
Dont prendre assés puet consolacion
Cilz qui ne sceit vivre sans Esperance.

Pour ce conoy et voy qu’elle m’ennorte
A li tenir, et j’ay cause et rayson,
Quar ja schay bien que s’elle estoit morte
Pou y veroit le mien entencion.
Dont je vos pris en ma conclusion
Que Bel Acueil priés pour m’alagance:
En attendant suy [sans] presoncion
Cilz qui ne sceit vivre sans Esperance.

Io son un pellegrin
Io son un pellegrin che vo cercando
Limosina, per Dio merce chiamando.
Et vo cantando con la voce bella,
Con dolce aspetto et colla treça bionda.
Nonnò se non bordone et la scarsella,
Et chiamo, et nonnè chi mi risponda.
Et quando credo andare alla seconda,
Vento contrario mi vien tempestando.
Io son un pellegrin che vo cercando
Limosina, per Dio merce chiamando.

En attendant Esperance confort
En attendant, Esperance conforté
L’omme qui vuolt avoir perfection:
En attendant se deduc et deporte,
En attendant li proumet guerredon,
En attendant passe tems et sayson,
En attendant met en li sa fiance:

While waiting, Hope comforts
the man who seeks perfection: while waiting, he amuses and entertains himself, while waiting, she promises him reward, while waiting, time and seasons pass, while waiting, he places his trust in her.

De toutz ces mets est servis a fayson
Cilz qui ne sceit vivre sans Esperance.

Esperance tient ouverte la porte
Adont chascuns puet avoir guarison.

Pour ce conoy et voy qu’elle m’ennorte
A li tenir, et j’ay cause et rayson,
Quar ja schay bien que s’elle estoit morte
Pou y veroit le mien entencion.

En attendant suy [sans] presoncion
Cilz qui ne sceit vivre sans Esperance.

I am a pilgrim who goes seeking
alms, calling for mercy in God’s name.
And I go singing with a lovely voice,
with sweet countenance and golden tresses.
Nothing have I save staff and satchel, and I call, and there is no one who answers me.
And just when I think I’m on a steady course, a contrary wind comes and blows up a storm against me.
I am a pilgrim who goes seeking
alms, calling for mercy in God’s name.
Salmagundi
From the French salmigondis or salmigondin, first attested in Rabelais’s Third Book of Pantagruel (1546).
1. A savory dish composed of chopped meats, seafoods, eggs, vegetables, and condiments.
2. Mixture, hodgepodge; a disparate or incoherent assemblage of miscellaneous components.

On several occasions Blue Heron has been commissioned to record certain pieces of music as part of a larger project. The most substantial and most fruitful of these commissions came from our friend Thomas Forrest Kelly, now professor emeritus at Harvard University, for a CD’s worth of music to accompany Capturing Music: The Story of Notation, illustrating its examples and going at least some way (as Tom hoped) to turn his fascinating book about sound into a sounding book. The repertoire extended from Gregorian chant to a song composed around 1400, by way of Leonin, Perotin, and Sumer is icumen in, and included half a dozen 14th-century works. A few years earlier David Rothenberg had asked us to contribute a couple of pieces by the trecento composers Jacopo da Bologna and Francesco Landini to the Oxford Recorded Anthology of Western Music.

In recent years Blue Heron has expanded its repertoire of 14th-century music, often working in collaboration with Debra Nagy and Les Délices, and we have recorded a live performance of our co-production of a concert version of Guillaume de Machaut’s Remede de Fortune. (That CD is scheduled for release in 2021.) In the meantime, it occurred to us that we could put together a pleasing miscellany of music composed between the end of the 13th century and the last decades of the 14th, a salmagundi of musical ingredients gathered from a storehouse of previously released recordings. No particular theme or concept unites these eight works, although a general tone of complaint—on grounds amorous, political, pecuniary, or musical—turns out to predominate; we hope that the dish may prove savory nonetheless.

Osellecto selvaggio
Osellecto selvaggio per stagione
Dolci versetti canta con bel modo,
Tale che grida forte chi non lodo.
Per gridar forte non si canta bene
Ma con soave dolce melodia
Sì si è piena la terra di magistri
Che loco più non trovano discepoli.

Musicas son / Già furon / Ciascun vuole
Musica son che mi dolgo piangendo
Veder gli effecti mie dolce perfecti
Lasciat per frottola i maghi intellecti.
Per che ignonasca e vici ogn’oquom costuma,
Lasciasì ‘l buon e pigliasi la schiuma.
Già furon le dolcece mie pregiate
Da chavalier, baroni et gran signori,
Or sono’n bastarditi e genti cori.
Ma io musica sol non mi lamento
Ch’ancor l’altre virtù lasciare sento.
Ciascun vuole narrar musical note
Et compor madrial, caccie, ballate,
Tenend’ogn’un le sue autenticate.
Chi vuol d’un virtù venire in loda
Conviengli prima giugner alla proda.

A wild little bird during the season
sings sweet little verses in a beautiful style, whereas those I do not praise shout loudly.
Loud shouting does not make for good singing, but with smooth and sweet melody
one produces good singing, and this requires skill.
Few have it, yet all make themselves out to be masters:
they compose ballatas, madrigals and motets,
all puff themselves up as Philips and Marchettos.*
Thus the land is so full of little masters that there is no room left for disciples.

Music am I, who, weeping, grieve to see my sweet, perfect workings abandoned in favor of country songs by amorous minds.
Because ignorance is a vice common to all men,
the good is cast aside and froth seized upon.
Heretofore were my sweet effects esteemed by knights, barons, and great lords;
now they are bastardized and sung by crowds.
But I, Music, do not lament alone,
because I see that the other virtues are also abandoned.
Everyone wants to dictate musical notes and compose madrigals, caccias, and ballatas, each sticking to his own rules.
He who wishes to be praised for a virtue ought first to step up into the prow.

Translations by Scott Metcalfe, Thomas Forrest Kelly, and Lawrence Rosenwald.
French motets around 1300

The technology of musical notation in Europe took a series of giant leaps forward over the course of the long century between around 1180 and 1320, as musicians worked out a system for specifying the duration of musical notes. Four milestones mark the course of this progression: the invention of rhythmic notation in the years before 1200 at the Cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris, adapting the non-measured neumes of plainchant to new uses (as seen in the works of Leoninus and Perotinus); the development of new forms of notes, each with a specific duration, described by Franco of Cologne in his Ars cantus mensurabilis (Art of measured song) sometime in the middle of the 13th century; the expansion of the range of rhythmic values at the shorter end of the spectrum associated with Petrus de Cruce, towards the end of the 13th century; and, in the early 1300s, the codification of a precise system of rhythmic relationships known as the Four Prolations, attributed to Philippe de Vitry.¹ Our first two selections are most likely by the composers whose names have been inscribed by historians of music on the latter two milestones.

Petrus de Cruce, a cleric and musician from Amiens who studied in Paris, was praised by the contemporary theorist Jacobus of Liège as a “worthy practical musician, who composed so many beautiful and good pieces of mensural polyphony and followed Franco’s precepts.” While in Franco’s system a breve (or short note) could be divided into two or three semibreves (shorter notes), Petrus, according to Jacobus, “sometimes put more than three semibreves for a perfect breve. At first he began to put four semibreves … Thereafter he went further and put for one perfect breve now five semibreves, now six, and now seven …” As an example Jacobus cited two motets found in the famous late 13th-century Montpellier Codex, including Aucun ont trouvé chant/Lonc tans me sui tenu/Annuntiantes. In this piece, the top voice or triplum does indeed fit two, three, five, six, and even seven semibreves (for the seven syllables of “li ai fait houmage pour”) into the space of one breve. In order to cram all its words in, the triplum moves about three times as fast as the other texted voice, the motetus; the motetus in turn sings roughly three times as fast as the tenor, whose melody is a fragment carved from a plainchant. The effect is exhilaratingly virtuosic and quasi-improvisational. Petrus surely did not want the triplum singer to divide his breve into seven mechanically equal parts, but rather expected him to shape his seven syllables as freely and understandably as possible. Obviously there is an upper limit to the speed at which the piece can go, and the tenor will need an excellent pair of lungs.

Garrit gallus/In nova fert animus, attributed to Philippe de Vitry, is one of a large number of musical works interpolated into the Roman de Fauvel, a satirical poem about a politically ambitious horse whose name is a byword for vice (F for Flattery, A for Avarice, U/V for Villainy, V for Varieté or inconstancy, E for Envy, L for Lacheté or cowardice). The poem by Gervès de Bus, a notary of the French royal chancery, survives in a number of manuscripts; one, probably from 1317–18, contains extensive interpolations of additional poetry and prose by another writer as well as pictures and 169 items of music. *Garrit gallus/In nova fert may have been composed especially for this version of Fauvel. In its text, a rooster (presumably Vitry, who was nicknamed Gallus by his friend Petrarch in a later work; the word means both rooster and a native of Gaul, a Frenchman) leads a chorus of lamenting roosters; the fox is Enguerran de Marigny, a notorious royal chancellor who wielded fearsome power at the court of King Philippe IV the Fair, here personified as a blind lion. The fox, described as an avatar of the dragon slain by the archangel Michael, rules over the lion and terrorizes the other animals. Relating the transformation of dragon into fox, Vitry’s motetus quotes the first line of Ovid’s Metamorphoses: “In nova fert animus mutatas dicere formas.” But “woe to the dragon”: shortly after Philippe died on November 29, 1314, Enguerran, having lost his blind royal protector, fell from power. He was indicted for financial crimes and necromancy, tried, and executed.

¹ For a detailed and readable account of the development of Western musical notation, including discussions of the music in tracks 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, and 8, see Thomas Forrest Kelly’s Capturing Music: The Story of Notation.
While the 14th-century virelai, however sophisticated, was in Machaut’s hands first and foremost the handmaiden of dance, its text an entrancing confection of metric and sonic play, the ballade was a vehicle for the expression of the most complex ideas and sentiments, and it received appropriately elaborate musical treatment. Machaut composed forty-one polyphonic ballades, as well as one for just one voice. He wrote Biauté qui toutes autres pere for two, and so it is transmitted in the complete-works manuscripts produced during Machaut’s lifetime. In a copy made for the duke of Berry fifteen or so years after Machaut’s death, a third part has been added, probably by someone other than Machaut. The two-voice original is an absolutely perfect piece of music, its extraordinary expressive power achieved with incredible economy of means. The three-voice version recorded here is quite captivatingly beautiful, too, but the new line does nothing to improve the piece; on the contrary, it is impossible not to feel that the original is weakened by the addition. The comparison is most instructive, as you will be able to hear for yourself when you can listen to the two-voice version we recorded for our forthcoming CD of the Remede de Fortune. In the meantime, I trust that this collaboration between Machaut and a later composer, however inadvertent on Machaut’s part, may not be unpleasing.

Machaut is the dominant figure of the 14th century in both poetry and music, and later poets and composers could not but engage with his work. In some cases the lines of influence or emulation are direct. In Machaut’s Remede de Fortune, the remedy for Fortune is Hope, Esperance, who counsels the story’s woebegone lover on how to withstand the blows of Fortune, endure the pains of love, and find happiness. She sings him a song: “En amer a douce vie / Et jolie, / Qui bien la scet maintenir” (“To be in love is a sweet life / and a happy one / for him who knows how to live it”). Esperance turns up again in an anonymous rondeau set to music sometime in the second half of the 14th century; the poem refers directly to En amer a douce vie: “Esperance, qui en mon cuer embat, / Sentir me fait d’amant la doulce vie” (Hope, which enters into my heart, makes me feel the sweet life of loving”). The rondeau Esperance is then referenced—musically, textually, or both—in a series of three works: En attendant d’amer la douce vie by Johannes Galiot, En attendant souffrir m’estuet by Philipoctus de Caserta, and En attendant soffrir m’estuet by Philipoctus de Caserta, and En attendant souffrir m’estuet by Philipoctus de Caserta, and En attendant souffrir m’estuet by Philipoctus de Caserta, and En attendant souffrir m’estuet by Philipoctus de Caserta, and... attendant, Esperance conforte by Jacob Senleches. The latter is recorded here. When Senleches reaches the last word of the ballade’s refrain (the last line of each stanza, “Cilz qui ne sceit vivre sans Esperance”), he sets the word “Esperance” to the opening melody of the anonymous Esperance.

The three “En attendant” songs appear in two important sources of French secular music of the late fourteenth century: the famous Chantilly codex and the manuscript Modena, Biblioteca Estense, α.M.5.24. What occasioned their composition is not known. The two manuscripts seem to have been copied by Italian scribes around the second decade of the fifteenth century, which does not offer much of a clue to the origins of a group of French songs that were likely composed in the 1380s. It is probably not coincidental that Louis de Bourbon, nephew of King Jean II of France, took “Esperance” as his motto after he was released from English captivity in the mid-1360s and that the French royal family adopted it by the 1380s, nor that “Souffrir m’estuet” (“I must suffer”) was the motto of Bernabò Visconti of Milan. Connections between the Bourbon-Valois nobility of France and the Visconti may have prompted Philipoctus to link the two mottos in the ballade En attendant souffrir m’estuet and inspired the creation of the “En attendant” songs; we might envision some sort of half collaborative, half competitive effort commissioned by noble patrons. But this is all speculation by latter-day musicologists.

The “En attendant” songs are made in a rhythmically and harmonically complex style that was enabled by refinements in musical notation developed in the latter part of the fourteenth century. The best music in this style, later dubbed the Ars subtillior (the more subtle art), is jazzy, at once hard to grasp and intoxicating; its complicated rhythms are precisely specified but the effect is loose and improvisatory. And Senleches was one of the best, as his En attendent, Esperance conforte bears ample witness.

Three cranky Italian songs

We season our French salmigondin with a trio of piquant Italian songs. The first is an anonymous ballata, Io son un pellegrin. The Italian ballata is not the same as a French ballade, although both forms (like the virelai or chanson baladée) started out as dance songs, as their names suggest. In Io son un pellegrin a two-line ripresa (“Io son ...”) introduces a pair of two-line piedi (“Et vo cantando...”, “Nonnò ...”), followed by a two-line volta with the rhyme scheme and music of the ripresa (“Et quando credo ...”); a repeat of the ripresa brings the piece to a conclusion. The song is delightfully melismatic, spinning out ornamented melody at the beginning and end of each section, yet the words are easily comprehensible, since between melismas the text is declaimed syllabically and exactly aligned in the two voices. The speaker complains that no-one answers his call for alms, despite his being a pretty blonde with a nice voice.

Jacopo da Bologna set the madrigal Osellecto selvaggio twice, once for two voices (the version recorded here) and again as a three-part caccia, in which two canonic voices chase each other above a slowly-moving tenor. The trecento madrigal (unlike the 16th-century musical madrigal) is a poetic form, of which Osellecto selvaggio is a typical example: three three-line strophes called terzetti, each in 11-syllable lines with a stressed tenth syllable and rhymed abb (or cdd or eff), are followed by a two-line ritornello in endecasillabo sdrucciolo (in which the stressed tenth syllable is followed by two unstressed), rhymed gg. Jacopo underlines the arrival of the ritornello with an arpegging harmonic shift. The text sounds a note heard rather often in later 14th-century musical settings: the aggrieved composer deplores the proliferation of self-styled masters who vainly imagine themselves musicians with the skills of a Philippe de Vitry—or, indeed, the maker of the piece at hand, whose shining accomplishments (on display in the music being sung) self-evidently cast those of his inferiors into the shade.

The theme recurs in Francesco Landini’s triple madrigal, Musica son/Già furon/Ciascun vuole. Music herself speaks in a sequence of three one-strophe madrigals (abb terzetto plus cc ritornello), each assigned to a different part. As the three texts are declaimed simultaneously, it will be a skilled listener indeed who can fully comprehend the sweet, perfect workings of Landini’s most masterful counterpoint.

We are most grateful to Tom Kelly and David Rothenberg for inviting us to record these pieces in the first place, and we extend our thanks to W. W. Norton and Oxford University Press for granting us permission to reissue the recordings in this collection.

—Scott Metcalfe
was named to the Bestenliste of the Preis der deutschen Schallplattenkritik. Blue Heron's recordings also include a CD of plainchant and polyphony that accompanies Thomas Forrest Kelly’s book Capturing Music: The Story of Notation, the live recording Christmas in Medieval England, and a compilation of medieval songs entitled A 14th-Century Salmagundi.

SCOTT METCALFE is widely recognized as one of North America’s leading specialists in music from the fifteenth through seventeenth centuries and beyond. Musical and artistic director of Blue Heron since its founding in 1999, he was music director of New York City’s Green Mountain Project from 2010-19, and he has been guest director of TENET (New York), the Handel & Haydn Society (Boston), Emmanuel Music (Boston), The Tudor Choir and Seattle Baroque, Pacific Baroque Orchestra (Vancouver, BC), Quire Cleveland, and the Dryden Ensemble (Princeton, NJ), in music ranging from Machaut to Bach and Handel. Metcalfe also enjoys a career as a baroque violinist, playing with Les Délices (dir. Debra Nagy), L’Harmonie des Saisons (dir. Eric Milnes), and other ensembles. He has taught at Boston University and Harvard University and served as director of the baroque orchestra at Oberlin Conservatory, and in 2019-20 he was a visiting member of the faculty of Music History at the New England Conservatory, where he continues to teach classes.

Metcalfe received a bachelor’s degree from Brown University (1985), where he majored in biology, and a master’s degree in historical performance practice from Harvard (2005). Some of his research on the performance practice of English vocal music in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries will be published as two chapters in Music, politics, and religion in early seventeenth-century Cambridge: the Peterhouse partbooks in context (Woodbridge: Boydell and Brewer, forthcoming). He has also edited a motet by Francisco de Peñalosa for Antico Edition (2017) and the twelve unique songs in the newly-discovered Leuven chansonnier for the Alamire Foundation (Belgium). A new edition of the songs of Gilles Binchois (c. 1400–1460) is in preparation.
Blue Heron Recordings

MUSIC FROM THE PETERHOUSE PARTBOOKS
Canterbury Cathedral, c. 1540

VOL. 1
- Nicholas Ludford: Missa tre in unum
- John Mason: Ave regina coelestis

VOL. 2
- Richard Verney: Missa Fugium mundi
- Robert Hunt: Ave Maria mater doloris

VOL. 3
- Robert Jones: Missa Spiritu et Sanguine
- Nicholas Ludford: Ave cuffus conceptus

VOL. 4
- Robert Hunt: Ave Maria mater
- Hugh Starkey: Exultet Erin hac die

VOL. 5
- Anonymous: Missa deo nomine
- John Mason: Vex nobis misericordia
- Robert Hunt: Ave Maria mater doloris

THE LOST MUSIC OF CANTERBURY
5-CD SET

VOL. 1
- Anonymous: Missa deo nomine
- John Mason: Vex nobis misericordia
- Robert Hunt: Ave Maria mater doloris

GUILLAUME DU FAY
- MOTETS
- HYMNS
- CHANSONS
- SANCTUS PAPALE

CHRISTMAS IN MEDIEVAL ENGLAND

A 14TH-CENTURY SALMAGUNDI
- Machaut,
- Senleches,
- Landini et al.

JOHANNES OCKEGHEM
- COMPLETE SONGS
  - VOL. 1
  - VOL. 2 (2022)

EARLY MUSIC Gramophone Awards 2018 Winner Label

Blue Heron Recordings